

A Rainbow of Tape Cascades Through a Six-Story Atrium in Sydney by Christopher Jobson on March 15, 2017

"A million things that make your head spin," 2016-2017. Flagging tape, wood, paint, and hardware. 51.4 x 27.5 x 84.8 feet / 15.67 x 8.37 x 25.85 meters

LA-based artist Megan Geckler recently completed work on her latest multi-colored tape installation inside the 6-story atrium of the historic Customs House building in Sydney. The suspended artwork titled "A million things that make your head spin" was produced with 14 kilometers (46,000 feet) of flagging tape with the help of several volunteers. Like a swirling tornado of color, the piece dominates the interior space of the building utilized as a cultural hub located in the city's Circular Quay area. The installation will be on view through April 30, 2017. You can see more of Geckler's work in her online portfolio and watch a behind-the-scenes video below.
