

16 Free Things To Do In Sydney This February

By Jessica Best - 01 Feb 2017

That's right Sydney, it's already February (seriously?) and we're already broke (to be honest, we're not even surprised). On the upside, the forecast for the next month is looking mighty fine with a touch of exhibitions in the east, a bit of surfing in the north and just a helluva line-up of awesome activities for everyone in Sydney.

And the best part? They're all totally, undeniably and absolutely free. Hear that? That's the sound of our bank accounts cheering.

Look alive Sydney, here's your list of free things to do this February.

A MILLION THINGS THAT MAKE YOUR HEAD SPIN

It's time to get cultured with a new installation that will have you feeling like you're inside a rainbow. Coinciding with Art and About Sydney, American artist Megan Geckler has brought her multi-coloured work to Sydney, and you can see it for yourself at Customs House. The hyper-colourful, mathematically based, not to mention giant creation uses 720 colourful strips to make you feel like you're stepping right into the middle of a rainbow. Now if we can only find that pot of gold...

Where: Customs House, Circular Quay

When: Every day until Sunday 30 of April